MLB to Utah? Plans unveiled to build 'shovel-ready' ballpark at SLC site

The Miller family and the Larry H. Miller Company unveiled plans to turn the 100-acre Rocky Mountain Power District on Salt Lake City's west side into a stadium district, with plans to bring another pro franchise to Utah.

City set to expand ground floor use requirement—limiting private lobbies, mailrooms, and gyms—in a handful of its most urban zones

While proposed building height increases in a series of zones Downtown are beginning to grab attention, the city's bold ideas in the same ordinance for requiring street front uses other than private amenities for building residents have been flying under the radar.
